

When it comes to your IELTS practice, it might seem as if the hardest section to prepare for is Part Three - the speaking part.

There are some issues that can crop up with your IELTS preparation. If you do not have access to someone who speaks English, what happens? What if you only have access to individuals with the identical degree of English-speaking knowledge as possible? If you can't find someone to test your conversational abilities out on can you expect to take advantage of your IELTS practice?

If this scenario sounds familiar to you, then don't despair - there are some things that you can do to overcome this major obstacle.

And none of them involve tracking a native English speaker down to check your conversational skills!

IELTS Practice Does Not Have to Be Hard

Let's face it - the IELTS practice does not always involve complicated techniques. In actuality, some of the best ways you could prepare for the International English Language Testing System is to find the easiest tips possible...

. . .And use them!

You can approach Part Three with this identical viewpoint. Because you've already got all of the tools you require, you don't want a native English speaker that will assist you to develop your skills. Because are some of the easiest you don't need to hire an expensive tutor.

And you won't have to track down these tips - since we're about to lay them out to you.

How to Develop a Chat Theme for the IELTS Exam?

You already know that a simple "yes" or "no" question is not going to cut it on the speaking portion of the IELTS exam. Simply use these techniques to develop a topic of conversation, if you start to get stuck to talk about:

- Consider what other people might believe on that IELTS test subject.

By way of instance, you could say: "Even though some people believe --, I believe --".

- If you can, try contrasting two groups. If you are asked to talk about how people use technology, you can say: "I believe that older people feel --, while younger people tend to feel --".

- Do not be afraid to use your own private experience to answer a query. By way of instance, if you are asked about the advantages of travel, you can say: "In my personal experience, travel is good because --".

Possible, bring to help support an argument that you'd like to make. By way of instance, you could say: "Newspapers have a tendency to say -- about the subject, but I feel that --".

- Above all, do not be afraid to disagree during the conversation with the opinion of the tester. You're your person - so for those who have an opinion, voice it!